Councilman wants to ban gunfire in city

Evans says ricocheting

Past complaints of broken headlights and windows triggered city council member Ken Evans to propose an ordinance regulating the discharge of firearms in the city of Lawrenceburg.

Evans said he was surprised to learn the Lawrenceburg didn't already have an ordinance to that effect, and that the police department thought "There's no ordinance prohibiting that, and I don't think that should be happening in this town," Evans said at Monday's night council meeting.

Evans said in his years sitting on the council, he's heard several complaints from residents who found

Drunk hunting suspect indicted on three felonies

Just days before scheduled trial,
Gaines' case sent to grand jury

By Ben Carlson
News staff

The Lawrenceburg man charged with hunting under the influence and second-degree wanton endangerment is now facing a host of felony charges for an incident that took place last September.

David Gaines, 40, of 1040 Lakeshore Drive was indicted last week on three felony counts of first-degree wanton endangerment, along with harvesting wildlife while under the influence.

Gaines was indicted by the Anderson County Grand Jury just days before his Monday trial was supposed to begin in Anderson District Court on the original charges, which were misdemeanors.

Asked why Gaines was indicted nearly six months after the dove hunting incident during which he allegedly shot Lawrenceburg resident and former Fish and Wildlife officer Rex Burkhead, County Attorney Bobbi Jo Lewis said she could Help needed for family who lost home in fire

From staff reports

Tim Perry is a fighter, but that doesn't mean he and his family can't use a helping hand.

Perry's family lost everything in a fire last Monday afternoon that destroyed their home on Glensboro Road. Since that then he and six other family members have been living at Best Western and wondering how they will replace not only their home, but their clothes, furniture and other belongings.

"It's just hard, it's just really hard," Perry said Monday afternoon, a week after his home burned to the ground. "But I will say one thing about Anderson

Anderson athletic director Rick Sallee said. "I see the community and the student body getting behind the team."

The frenzy came about when the Lady Bearcats overcame a 10-point deficit with only 90 seconds to play to beat Simon Kenton in overtime in the Eighth Region final last Wednesday night at North Oldham High School.

The Lady Bearcats now own a 32-1 record and ranked No. 2 in the state in nearly every poll. They won their 24th straight game and earned the school's second girls' Sweet 16 berth in four years.

"The student body is ready to go to Bowling Green," Sallee said. "We have a pep bus going down and I think we will have a big crowd down there."

Trying to end Anderson's season Wednesday night will be third-ranked Henderson County (26-2) of the Second Region.

While the computer rankings are pointing Anderson to a showdown with top-ranked and unbeaten Marion County on Saturday, the Lady Bearcats know they have a major test Wednesday night.

"The kids at school are real excited," Sallee said. "I see a lot of school pride in what the girls' basketball team has accomplished and I see a lot of community pride in that too."

Complete coverage of the Lady Bearcats' regional championship and Sweet 16 trip can be found in Section B of this week's Anderson News.

Sports Editor John Herndon plans to be in Bowling Green Wednesday night and for any subsequent Anderson Sweet 16 games. You can follow his live commentary on Twitter at ANewsJPHerndon.

broken windows and headlights, allegedly because of ricocheted stray pellets or ammunition.

"Well, if it'll break a window or a headlight out of a vehicle, it'll put somebody's eye out," Evans said, "I believe it's time we had an ordinance on discharging a firearm in the city."

Anderson County Attorney Bobbi Jo Lewis said to her knowledge, no Lawrenceburg city ordinance currently exists that prevents a resident from discharging a firearm within city limits.

According to the Kentucky League of Cities, a city like Lawrenceburg does possess the power to enact an ordinance regulating the discharge of firearms within city limits.

The city council is, however, prohibited from establishing ordinances that limit the possession, purchase and sale, transfer, taxation, ownership and carrying of firearms in the city, according to state statute.

Council member Thomas Vaughn asked during discussion if there was already a criminal charge that would be brought against someone who discharged a firearm in the city's limits.

According to Police Chief Chris Atkins, certain circumstances — such as the type of firearm and who or what is the shooter's target — would determine if someone could be or would be charged with wanton endangerment for discharging a firearm.

The only instances Atkins said he's known of firearms being discharged within city limits is toward vicious dogs, to injure animals or scare starlings out of trees. He said he also knows of people who have used a .22 to rid their yards of moles.

Nine times out of 10, Atkins said, the police department will get a call about someone hearing a gun shot, but once dispatched to the area, officers can't find anything or anyone.

City council member Sandy Goodlett, presiding over the council meeting in the stead of the out-of-town Mayor Edwinna Baker, suggested the council bring the issue before the public safety committee, including the city attorney, mayor, city clerk and local law enforcement.

No date was set for the public safety committee meeting as of Monday night, and no discussion was held as to what type of firearm discharge would be prohibited in the new city ordinance.

Business owner believes parking signs limit downtown activity

Brad Gordon, owner of Court Street Music on Court Street, spoke before the council about his concerns regarding new, one-hour reserved parking signs posted at the Court Street parking spaces near his business.

The public works committee met in late February and approved new reserved parking signs on Court Street to address another business owner's concern about lack of available parking for her store.

For him, Gordon said, the parking problem isn't too much activity on Court Street. It's the potential for the parking signs to limit how long Court Street customers, as well as tourists coming to Lawrenceburg, will linger in the city's downtown and on Court Street.

Spending more money on installing more parking signs isn't addressing the downtown's parking issue, Gordon said.

"To me, it's more about the downtown and how we're going to get growth," Gordon said.

If courthouse activity was removed from the equation, Gordon said, there are really only three or four businesses affected by the 60-minute signs.

If there are going to be signs, Gordon said, he'd like to see that time for parking on Court Street extended to two hours or have the parking signs removed altogether.

"I'd hate to tell somebody, you'd better move along to Bardstown or Danville," Gordon said.

Durr, chairman of the council's public works committee, said his concern was that without limiting the parking on Court Street, drivers who aren't going to Court Street businesses could park there for as long as 12 hours a day.

But Gordon said that was a separate parking issue, mostly having to do with those using the courthouse.

Durr said, during the public works committee report to the council, that the public works committee will mostly likely meet again to address these new concerns over Court Street parking.

"Since then, we've learned they're not satisfied with an hour," Durr said of the signs.

Homeowner addresses council about water run off from Twelve Oaks

Resident Jane Scott Bentley, who resides at 400 Gailane Street, said she has been battling with a water problem on her property for the past three years.

"I had the greenest grass you'd ever seen, because I had the moat," Scott Bentley said of the condition of her property this summer. "I don't have a drawbridge, but I have a moat."

She requested that somebody could come from the city to see about the water running into her yard from the Twelve Oaks subdivision, and see if something could be done.

"It's a real concern," she said.

Other business

Anderson County EMS will now be running three full-time ambulances day and night, according to Fire Chief Bobby Hume, reporting for Public Safety Director Bart Powell on Monday night.

The Wild Turkey water tank is full of water and waiting on the installation of a SCATA system, Public Works Director Larry Hazlett said, and the water tank's logo would be fixed on the tank sometime in April or May, weather-permitting.

Court Appointed Special Advocates (CASA) director Shirley Elkin also made a presentation to the city council about the group's history and current service.

CASA, which appoints adults to speak on the behalf of children involved in the court system, currently serves about 112 children in both Anderson and Franklin counties.

not discuss the case, adding only that Gaines was indicted "after consideration by the grand jury."

The indictment, which was handed down late last week, was presented by assistant county attorney David Nutgrass, who also serves as an assistant prosecutor with the Commonwealth's Attorney's office. That means Nutgrass will prosecute Gaines in Anderson Circuit Court.

Gaines' attorney, Kevin Fox, said he never expected an indictment so close to a trial date.

"I was very surprised to learn that this had been presented to the grand jury after all of this time has passed," Fox said.

The alleged shooting occurred on a public dove hunting field off Gilbert's Creek Road last September. Burkhead claims in a statement that Gaines fired at him and birdshot from Gaines' gun "hit him rather hard," despite a report filed by Fish and Wildlife officers that showed Burkhead was nearly 200 yards away from Gaines at the time.

That report also alleges that when a Fish and Wildlife officer approached Gaines, he could smell a strong odor of alcoholic beverages and noticed Gaines' eyes were "very glossy and bloodshot."

Gaines allegedly told the officer that he had four or five beers when he was home, and he had his last beer around noon.

The officer also reported finding six empty beer cans in Gaines' cooler, one of which had been shot with a shotgun.

Allegedly shooting at Burkhead resulted in one felony charge. The others stem from two people hunting with Burkhead at the time, who did not claim they had been hit.

The alcohol charge shifted from hunting under the influence to taking wildlife under the influence. The latter allows a person who "is manifestly under the influence" to be charged if alcohol is "noticeable to the senses," according to a Fish and Wildlife media relations spokesperson.

"It's a tougher standard that driving under the influence," the spokesperson said, adding that the smell of alcohol on a person alone isn't enough to charge someone under the statute.

'Beauty and Beast' high school musical opens Friday night

By Meaghan Downs
News staff

As a candlestick and clock banter on stage, a dancing spoon (she also embodies the roles of wolf and villainager) waits in the dark auditorium wings.

Anderson County high school student Suzanne Lilly said, in a loud whisper, that the cast and crew of "Beauty and the Beast" have basically recreated the animated Disney movie from the 1990s, one that holds fond childhood memories for Lilly and many of her classmates.

"Probably because it was a movie when we were little," Melissa Shouse, who plays a dancing knife, added. "Watching it become from nothing to something is cool."

After holding auditions in December, weeks of hard work are about to pay off as the curtain opens this Friday night for a two-week run of performances.

Senior Dylan Buser, who is in charge of lighting for the production, said he isn't nervous about opening night, even though it's his first year being in charge of lighting.

But he knows that he needs to make sure the actors are in place where the lights hit, that they can be heard with as little interference as possible.

"I realize my job is really important in that if I mess up, it's really big," he said.

This version of "Beauty and the Beast" is based on the Broadway production, so there are a few extra musical numbers and transitional scenes than what the animated film includes.

But anyone who is a fan of the '90s film (and of singing flatware) will enjoy the play, students said.

"We worked so hard on it and we're so proud of it," Shouse said. "We think it's something everyone can go see."

he should not have done.

"I understand why did what he did as a father," Atkins said. "But that doesn't make it legal and it put everyone in a dangerous situation."

Atkins said any notion that Hillyer was involved in a citizen's arrest is wrong because that happens when an actual crime is in the process of taking place. "If they were his house and he had detained him there, it would have had a different outcome. He might not have been charged," Atkins said.

Andrew Muns, 18, of 96 Man-O-War Drive, one of four suspects in the home invasion, claims he was at 252 Hunter Ridge when Hillyer busted through the door carrying a handgun. Muns claims Hillyer pointed it at him and threatened to shoot him if he didn't go with Hillyer to the police station.

Muns claims that Hillyer then took out a retractable police baton and struck him in the right temple while Hillyer's 15-year-old son pointed a 9 mm handgun at him.

In his statement, Hillyer told police that he took his son with him to help identify Muns, who they found walking on Hunter Ridge.

Hillyer told police that he got out of the car and told Muns he needed to come with him to the police station. He said Muns refused to go and at one point begged him to let him turn himself in.

Hillyer said Muns then dropped what he was carrying and appeared ready to run, so gave him a "light hit" with the baton to "let him know he needed to listen."

Hillyer said he drew his gun while approaching Muns in case he was armed, but never pointed it at him.

Hillyer is scheduled to appear in Anderson District Court on April 4 at 9 a.m.

Muns and three other suspects were all jailed shortly after the home invasion.

A fourth suspect, Ryan Ashburn, 19, of 1259 Beaver Lake Road, waited outside in what police described as a getaway vehicle.

All four are charged with first-degree robbery, first-degree burglary, theft of firearms and tampering with physical evidence.

Muns and Charles D. Peach, 18, of 215 Bluebird Court allegedly entered Hillyer's residence with a 17-year-old Anderson County High School student, whose name is not being released because of his age.

According to police reports, the 17-year-old wore a bandana over his face and allegedly pointed a semi-automatic .9 mm handgun at Hillyer's son and another teen inside the residence, threatening them. Police say during the invasion, the 17-year-old removed the magazine from the gun and showed the teenage victims that the gun was real and loaded.

The suspects all fled from the back door of the residence but were seen by a neighbor who called police about suspicious activity.

Police initially were unable to locate the vehicle, but the teens inside the residence were able to identify the suspects and police immediately began searching for them.

Police were able to track down the 17-year-old to a residence on Carlton Drive, where the suspect's grandmother claimed he had come home right after school and had left for only a few minutes after that to walk to a store.

Ashburn, the alleged getaway driver, was identified and police arrested him at his home on Beaver Lake Road, where he allegedly confirmed that he had met up with Peach, Muns and the 17-year-old in the West Park Shopping Plaza after school let out that day. Ashburn told police he wasn't aware of the planned robbery until he and the three others had left the residence and discussed what had happened, according to police reports.

Ashburn told police he had dropped off the 17-year-old near Cardinal Lane and Peach and Muns near Bluebird Court.

Ashburn was placed under arrest and warrants were issued later that night for Muns and Peach, who were arrested the following day.

The 17-year-old was taken into custody at the residence on Carlton Drive and claimed that the gun he used was an airsoft pistol and wasn't real.

Police said a search of Ashburn's vehicle revealed a black airsoft pistol that did not match the description or color of the ones the victim's described as being used during the invasion.

Muns, Ashburn and Peach are scheduled to be arraigned April 11 at 9 a.m. in Anderson District Court.

Birdshot, booze case to be tough sell to jury

Someone could have knocked me over with birdshot from 190 yards away last week when I learned that the trial is off for the man charged with hunting drunk and shooting Rex Burkhead.

Just days before the trial against David Gaines was to begin, misdemeanor charges were ratcheted up to felonies after the case was presented to the grand jury.

That, folks, is very unusual because prosecutors — in this case the county attorney's office — don't typically spend hours upon hours preparing for trial only to have the charges jump from misdemeanors to felonies and moved into circuit court.

If felony charges are warranted, it typically happens within a month or two of the suspect's arrest, not six months later and just days before a trial.

I asked the county attorney why this happened and was told only that the grand jury examined the case and made the indictment. In fairness to her, she can't discuss an ongoing case, so expecting more would be unreasonable.

My theory? With all due respect to the prosecutorial ability of the county attorney, Gaines wouldn't take a plea deal, and the case was too much of a potential loser in front of a jury.

Here's why.

Remember the 190 yards wisecrack in the first paragraph? According to a report from the Fish and Wildlife officer who arrested Gaines, that's how far Gaines was from Burkhead when he shot.

I'm not a ballistics expert but I do know that birdshot fired from a shotgun can travel that far only if the shooter fires at a steep, upward angle. And when that shot falls, about the only force it has left is gravity.

I also know that in a public dove field, getting sprayed with birdshot is fairly common.

When combined, a jury might not doubt that Burkhead was shot, but proving Gaines intended to shoot him would be challenging, especially when the defense could fill the witness box with other dove hunters who have also been "shot."

What also intrigues me is the alcohol charge. From what I've seen, Gaines was never given a sobriety test — field, blood or breath. The original charge of hunting under the influence is now harvesting wildlife under the influence, which requires only that the suspect is "manifestly under the influence of alcohol," which requires only that it's notable to the senses.

Normally, someone charged with a couple of misdemeanors will readily accept a plea bargain, behave for six months and have the charges removed from his or her record.

That Gaines pushed this to trial tells me his attorney figured getting a jury to convict would have been difficult at best, and that Gaines had a good chance to walk away unscathed.

Even if he gambled with a jury and lost, odds are Gaines would have served a short stint in jail then finished his sentence on probation.

Now the game has changed. With felony charges, the prosecutor has a much larger hammer with which to pound out a plea deal with Gaines. Now if he gambles with a jury and loses he'll be a convicted felon for the rest of his life.

Not only would that cost him the right to hunt, it would also cost him the right to vote and own firearms.

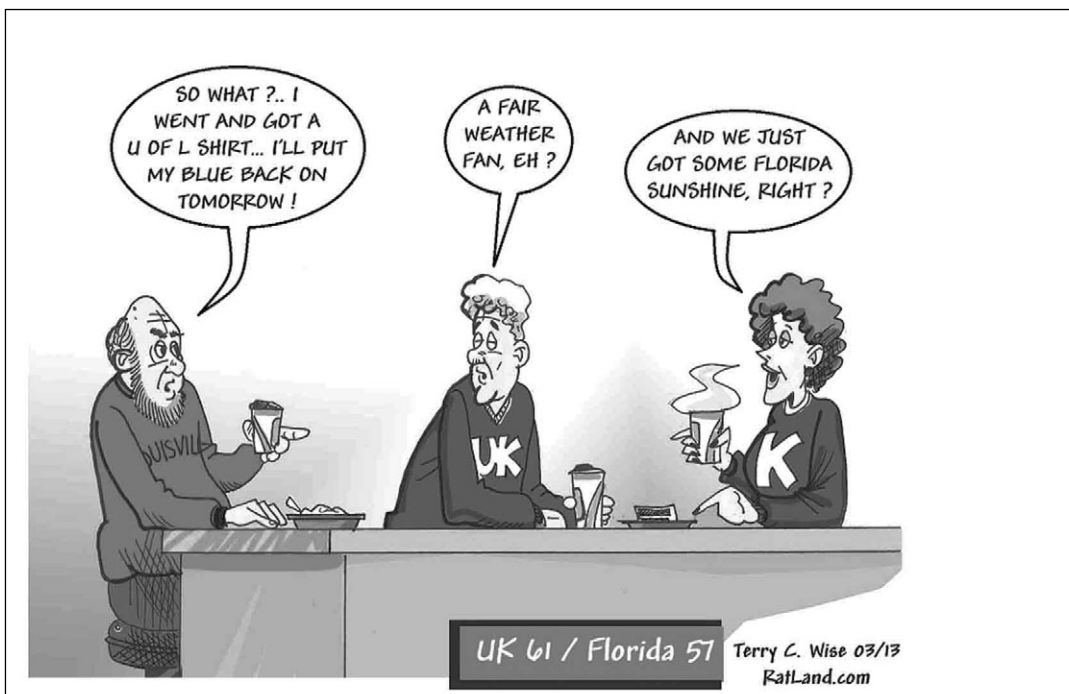

Chances are Gaines, depending on the plea offer, will opt for a deal that will see the charges reduced to their original form and include little to no jail time.

I guess that's justice, but I'm not exactly sure how.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Residents give road crews 'high five'

To the editor:

Our family would like to extend to the streets and roads crews a well overdue thank you to all of the workers who keep our roads safe and clear of ice and snow.

Although we haven't had much this winter, it is always a comfort to see a snow plow going up the road after bad weather.

Although we live in the county, we believe the city streets are done just the same.

These workers don't get the thanks they deserve, but we want them to know how much their work means to us.

God bless, and keep up the great work.

Canning a great way to preserve meat

Canning meat is included in the food preservation workshop that I will be teaching April 13.

Tommy Yankee, Extension agent for agriculture and natural resources, will be teaching gardening basics during this first session April 13.

The meat will be processing while we learn about gardening.

I can meat because I'm a tent camper. There's only so long fresh meat will keep in a cooler. I get tired of canned chili, tuna and salmon.

Popular meats for canning are beef, veal, pork, chicken, turkey, rabbit, game birds, small game animals such as squirrels and large game animals such as deer and elk. Rabbit, squirrel, game birds, venison and elk are usually brined before canning. Most people will not choose to can fish because it takes so much longer than meat to process.

Joan Martin
Guest columnist

When preparing meat, be sure to remove as much fat as possible. Fat left on the meat will melt and climb the sides of the jar during processing. If the fat comes in contact with the sealing edge of the lid, the jar may not seal.

Canned sausage is the best. I like it much better than fresh cooked sausage because it isn't crispy and it's completely tender, no gristle anywhere. Of course, this isn't something I eat every day but it sure is good when I'm camping. The canning method is below.

You can make sausage from fresh pork or purchase sausage. Do not use sage to season sausage as it may become bitter when processed. Most purchased sausage will not list sage. All the sausage I have canned so far has been good for canning.

Shape sausage into patties. Cook until lightly browned. Drain and pat off excess fat.

Pack hot sausage into hot jars leaving 1-inch headspace. Ladle hot broth over sausage. Beef broth or pork broth will give better flavor but boiling water may be used. Remove air bubbles with a plastic knife or air bubble releaser.

Adjust two-piece caps. Process pints for 1 hour and 15 minutes after the canner is exhausted of air (which can take 15 to 30 minutes.) Process at 10 pounds pressure in a pressure canner. Do not use a pressure saucepan because of problems with uneven heating.

Note: 1 pound of sausage fills one-pint jar.

Contact the Anderson County Extension Office for information about the Food Preservation Workshop. In addition to pressure canning basics, canning meat and gardening basics April 13, there will be three other workshops. June 15 is canning vegetables, tomatoes, salsa and other tomato products. July 13 is canning fruits and making pickles. August 13 is jams and jelly along with freezing and dehydrating fruits and vegetables. There is a charge for these workshops.

Easy question, hard answer

Probably ask more questions than I get answers.

Because I'm sympathetic to those who want answers, I'm fairly good at answering questions.

Except for one.

"Do you like being a newspaper reporter?"

Pause.

Sometimes I really need to think about that one.

Not that I dislike my job. I definitely don't.

But it feels wrong to talk about my job in a manner of liking. Liking is something you do on Facebook photos. I like eggplant lasagna.

I like reading "Game of Thrones" until I fall asleep, eyeglasses perched on the edge of my nose, using the open paperback pages as a pillow.

The verb "like" isn't the word I'm looking for.

Maybe the perfect word to describe why I do what I do is floating somewhere in a Monday morning conversation I had with an Anderson County parent.

I met him for the first time at the door as he came out of the rain.

He had brought a CD full of photos for me to look over for Wednesday's paper.

As the computer whirled and I waited for each picture's window to pop open in color on screen (and for me to close out of every Internet pop-up ad), we chatted. Made small talk.

And without sitting down to a formal interview and without formal introductions, I heard a 20-minute version of the life of a man.

He had lost much of his hearing while serving in the Army during the Vietnam War era; he was an artillery man, he said.

He didn't lose the sense of sound immediately while in Vietnam.

Actually, he never went over to Vietnam at all during the war, due to injuries. But he kept training with the Army, he said, and slowly, surely, his hearing grew worse until hearing aids became a necessity.

Because this wasn't a formal interview, and my crumpled, rain-stained notebook unavailable to keep record of linear events, the timeline zigzagged.

From the Army to marriage to a childhood raised by a single mother to faith to his children to how he ended up in the same town as his brother, also a transplant from Texas.

No one needs to be a reporter to have this conversation. We've all had this conversation.

Over coffee. Over pitchers of beer. Over intertwined hands clasped in a prayer.

I like coffee. I like beer.

But I love sitting behind my desk, shoving what seems like a thousand yellow sticky notes aside, and recording this story for a column before it's forgotten.

So that this particular conversation — which does not belong in a feature story or the community calendar or a line score for the sports section — would not be contained to just a scribbled idea for a future column, instead of this one.

That's why I like being a reporter.

Now you see why I needed to pause.

Raised beds prevent gardening problems

Minute by minute and hour by hour, we keep getting more sunlight every day.

I love it and even though we fell back an hour, I just feel like I have a little more time to do things.

Only one more week to go and spring will officially be here. Yea, is all I can say. Another growing season is about to begin.

As someone who has been getting a lot of mud on her muck boots, it's hard to even imagine a drought right now. I've been squishing and slipping all over the place while walking the farm with the dogs. It's an evening ritual, now.

Zeus, my new farm dog, compliments of Mt. Eden Greenhouse, is learning his place in the pack. A large chocolate Lab mix, at 9 years of age he still has the energy of a pup. Tiller still rules the farm at 14 with bad hips and Zeus has a huge crush on her. Spanky just wants to play and protect. We make a funny sight while racing around the farm.

The amount of moisture that we've had this winter has restored many native plants, shrubs and trees.

Unfortunately, with all the clay in our Anderson County soil, we're going to have to pray for lots of sunshine to dry out the soil before we break ground.

Those of us with raised beds have a distinct advantage over field growers. They drain quicker. They also have fewer weeds and fewer critter problems. Build them high enough and you can even cut the strain on your back.

The weather will be nice enough, pretty much from now on out, to be working and building things for the garden. I need to rebuild some raised beds this year. Since I am the self-appointed queen of frugal, I use a variety of things to make my raised beds.

Keep in mind that whatever material you use will leach out any chemicals into the soil. If you plant vegetables in that bed, the chemicals in the soil will be taken up by the roots of the plants and into the fruits of your harvest.

Do not use treated wood for raised beds. If you do use wood, use cedar wood. It's a natural bug repellent and it lasts several years.

Old oak is another great wood to use. Railroad ties and telephone poles have a variety of chemicals in them, although I've used some that are about a decade old.

Cinder blocks are a great choice for raised beds. They last forever, unless you crack them. You can also mix and pour your own concrete borders. Just be sure that the "walls" are at least 10-12 inches tall. That allows you enough room to add the perfect soil mix on top of your field soil.

If you had a great garden last year and did not add any soil amendments, then you will need to replace some soil nutrients before you plant. I like to lay some lime down on top of the thin layer of wood ash before I work the soil. I add nitrogen in the form of compost and compost tea, after I plant. You really should have your soil tested, if you haven't done it for a while. The Extension office can send it off for you.

As spring rolls in, the stores roll out their gardening goodies. You can't help but look. Looking is fun. Just be sure that you look at quality, not quantity. Now, get out there in the sunshine.

Vitamin D gives us strong bones. Happy Growing.

Questions answered on vehicle taxes, license plates

Can I find out the amount that I paid last year in vehicle taxes? Before you call our office, look at your current registration receipt. The tax information is printed on it. If for some reason you don't have it the registered owner (name on the title) can obtain this information. Our office doesn't give out tax information over the phone due to the personal nature of the information and the lack of a way to verify the identification of the registered owner. There have been instances where the registered owner didn't even want his or her spouse to obtain this information. Therefore, to protect the owner's privacy (Drivers Privacy Protection Act) and the clerk's office, the registered owner (name on the title) must come to our office and provide an ID in order to obtain tax or any other information on their vehicles.

Jason Denny
County clerk

The owner needs to provide a plate number, title number or vehicle identification number for the vehicles in question. The state computer system doesn't allow us to bring up a list of vehicles that are currently owned or registered. We can at that time provide the owner with a print out with the information that has been requested. What does junking a vehicle really mean? Junking a vehicle can mean different things to different individuals. Some associate "junking" to mean taking their vehicle to the salvage yard to have it crushed. Even though a vehicle is taken to the salvage yard, that alone doesn't take the ownership or the tax implications away. The state's and clerk's definition of "junking a vehicle" is when the registered owner of a vehicle surrenders the title and the license plate of the vehicle to our office. We will then mark the vehicle title as "junked" and update the state computer system so that the vehicle will no longer be associated with the previous owner.

All taxes on the vehicle must be paid before "junking" can take place. In order to comply with audit standards, the registered owner must then sign the "junked" receipt to complete the transaction as well as provide an ID. The cost to "junk" a vehicle is $ 3. If for some reason the registered owner of the vehicle can't locate his or her title, a duplicate title can be ordered for $10. The title will then be mailed to the registered owner's address in 3-5 days. The vehicle can then be "junked" at our office. March is busy, don't procrastinate! In addition to regular birth month renewals, March is also the renewal month for farm vehicles, commercial vehicles, motor homes, campers and trailer plates. In order to obtain or to renew a farm plate, the registered owner must sign an affidavit stating that they are engaged in Farming. Farm Plates cost the same as Standard Plates. There is a voluntary donation of $10 that is split between Kentucky Proud, 4-H and the FFA. The money collected in Anderson County is sent back to these three local groups. This fee can be removed at your request. Farm vehicles being licensed for 55,000 pounds or more require a completed 2290 form (heavy highway vehicle use tax return). Commercial plates Vehicles that are used for business purposes need to be licensed commercial. A vehicle licensed for 14,000 pounds or more requires commercial insurance. The tow vehicle must be licensed for the weight of the vehicle and the amount being hauled. (Check with the Department of Vehicle Enforcement for additional rules and regulations.) Trailers being towed by these vehicles must also be licensed. Trailer plates Trailers that are used commercially (in a business) must have a license plate. The tow vehicle must have a weight plate that covers the weight of the vehicle, trailer and load being hauled. Standard plates are for individual (non-commercial use) and are $21 for the year. "In God We Trust" plates are available for the same amount. There are a variety of plates, including specialty and personalized plates for additional fees. You can visit our website at www.andersoncountyclerk.ky.gov or the Transportation Cabinet at www.transportation.ky.gov/mvl to access information and answers to frequently asked questions. You may also visit the Department of Revenue at www.revenue.ky.gov for vehicle tax related questions. As always, please feel free to contact myself or any of the deputies regarding questions that you may have regarding the vehicle licensing process or any other office related matter. Our office phone number is 839-3041. I can be reached by e-mail at jason.denny2@ky.gov or by cell or text at 502-680-5028. Jason Denny is the Anderson County Clerk

Barr discusses sequester, spending, guns, Paul's filibuster

By Ben Carlson
News staff

Freshman Congressman Andy Barr (R-Lexington) pulled no punches in discussing the federal spending cuts known as the sequester and other national topics following his visit here last week to tour the public school system.

Barr railed against the sequester, a deal struck between Democrats and Republicans two years ago that went into effect March 1 and chopped a reported $85 billion in federal spending.

He also weighed in on entitlement reform, gun control and Kentucky Senator Rand Paul's now famous filibuster of President Obama's nominee to lead the CIA.

Barr said the sequester is not how the federal government should cut spending.

"First of all, the sequester was a bad idea when Obama proposed it in the summer of 2011, and it's a bad idea today," said Barr, who defeated Democrat Ben Chandler last fall.

"The reason it's bad is not because of the amount of the cuts, it's because of the indiscriminate nature in which it's applied."

Barr said he and other House members attempted to remedy the "indiscriminate nature" of the sequester, particularly for the military, by passing a continuing resolution in the House.

"That would have provided the Department of Defense with the ability to reprioritize," he said.

Barr also lashed out at Obama, who spent the weeks leading up to the sequester warning of its dire implications.

"The president should lead instead of trying to scare the American people," Barr said. "To put this in context, we're spending $15 billion more than last year, and we're borrowing $3 billion a day. We need to reduce spending."

Barr said instead of entitlement and other spending cuts the first focus should be on government waste.

"What we should be doing is eliminating expensive junkets for federal bureaucrats, and we should eliminate [the president's] free cell phone program that's costing $2.2 billion a year instead of canceling White House tours that cost the taxpayer just $18,000 a week.

"We should look at wasteful programs like hundreds of millions in green energy grants to China. There are plenty of opportunities to achieve much more than $85 billion without threatening national security."

Asked why Congress allows wasteful spending to continue when most Americans are forced to watch every penny, Barr said he's still learning after only two months on the job, but already sees the problem.

"My first impression is that the bureaucrats in the executive branch are insulated from accountability, and there's a lack of accountability in the executive branch," he said, adding plenty of blame also lies in the Democrat-controlled Senate, which has not passed a budget in four years and relies instead on continuing resolutions.

"That's the most basic responsibility in government," Barr said. "They haven't been doing the job that is required by law."

Barr said he co-sponsored legislation that became law last month that will withhold pay from Congress unless a budget is passed this year.

"The main point I'd like to make to the folks in Anderson County is that we need to reduce spending, but do it in a more intelligent way, and to make sure Congress is doing its job. If they don't pass a budget, they shouldn't get paid."

As for entitlement reform, Barr said it's important to act now to preserve the benefits for the long run.

"If we don't reform now, by 2025, 100 percent of all federal revenue will be consumed by Medicare, Medicaid, Social Security and interest on the national debt," he said.

"My support for reforming benefits is not about austerity or cutting benefits to seniors; it's about preventing cuts to seniors and making sure the government keeps its promises to seniors and people nearing retirement."

"The growth in these programs is crowding out every other federal priority, including national security, roads and bridges, transportation and education."

On gun control, Barr said he is a "strong defender" of the 2nd Amendment and will have two principals in guiding any vote he makes on gun control legislation.

"Number one is it constitutional," he said. "Two is will it solve the problem and prevent someone like [the shooter in Connecticut]."

"A ban on assault weapons or high-capacity magazines has constitutional problems and wouldn't have prevented that guy from doing what he did."

"The focus shouldn't be on gun control.

We need to focus on a national instant criminal background check that is effective. Only half of the states report into that system, which doesn't have complete information, particularly regarding mental illness.

"We need to do as much as we can to ensure school safety and prevent guns from getting into the hands of the seriously mentally ill."

As for Sen. Paul's filibuster to force the White House to provide clarity on its use of drones to kill American citizens thought to be involved in terrorism, Barr said he and several of his colleagues attended it to show their support.

"They owed it to the American people to reassure Americans that they don't have constitutional authority to unilaterally kill an American citizen non-combatant on US soil," Barr said.

"Sen. Paul wasn't getting an answer to his question about that, and did a great service to the American people."

Middle school greenhouse only one step to Eagle Scout

If confirmed, eighth grader may be troop's youngest Eagle Scout

By Meaghan Downs
News staff

For one Saturday, 14-year-old Jeremiah Andrade is a general contractor, not just a Boy Scout.

"We're going to try to get it all done today, we'll go until five," Andrade said early Saturday morning, explaining the day's work schedule briefly before excusing himself to speak with a volunteer. Andrade, who raised about $1,100 to fund his Eagle Scout project, said he's never built a greenhouse or a tool shed before.

But three years ago, he'd never been a Boy Scout, either.

Now Andrade is answering cell phone calls about supplies, helping construct the base for the 6 x 8 foot greenhouse, listening to an adult volunteer explain how the wooden 6 x 5 tool shed would be built.

"What he does is get the right people there at the right time," Mark Marraccini, a former Eagle Scout who works with advancement in Troop 37, said Saturday morning.

All that stands between Andrade and his Eagle Scout status is a greenhouse, tool shed and two 45-gallon rain barrels.

That, and paperwork, proving Andrade has earned 21 merit badges and held a leadership position in the troop, as well as presentation in front of the Eagle Scout board of review.

But if anyone could prove his determina-

Greenhouse ceremony at middle school

The Anderson County Middle School Junior Farmers of America will be having a ceremony on March 19 at 3:30 p.m. to celebrate the building of its new greenhouse, constructed by ACMS student and JFA member Jeremiah Andrade as his Eagle Scout project. The JFA will use the greenhouse to grow plants to sell as fundraisers. Sheila Mitchell, superintendent of Anderson County Schools, along with ACMS administration will be present, according to seventh grade teacher Denise McElroy.

tion to become an Eagle Scout, Andrade could, according to Scoutmaster Kevin Cox. Andrade looks at what he has to do, Cox said, and looks at the next step in his timeline to Eagle Scout.

"Jeremiah has a maturity about him that a lot of younger guys don't have, that gives him a boost," Cox, who has been a Scoutmaster for the last 24 years, said.

Typically, Cox said, Boy Scouts who apply become Eagle Scouts between the ages of 16 and 18, with age 18 being the absolute cut off.

"If he goes and completes, he will be the youngest [Eagle Scout] I've had in a long time," Cox said.

In January, Troop 37 celebrated the Eagle Scout achievement of Bob Jacoby, the youngest of three Eagle Scout brothers.

The odds of becoming an Eagle Scout, according to an Anderson News article about the Jacoby brothers, are about 2 in 100.

Since 2007, Troop 37 has about 16 Boy Scouts achieve Eagle Scout honors, and roughly 20 Eagle Scouts are currently active within the troop, according to Cox and Marraccini.

"It's real important, not a lot of people get [Eagle Scout]; our troop

Eighth grader Jeremiah Andrade, left, was in charge of the construction of a 6 by 8 greenhouse between the seventh and eighth grade wings at the middle school Saturday morning. If confirmed as an Eagle Scout, 14-year-old Jeremiah may be the youngest Eagle Scout his troop has ever had, according to Scoutmaster Kevin Cox.

though, we have quite a number of Eagle Scouts," Andrade said.

Last April, Andrade said he was speaking with his seventh grade teacher Denise McElroy about his Eagle Scout project when McElroy suggested he assist in building a greenhouse for the middle school.

McElroy, who assisted Andrade Saturday morning by letting workers in and out of her classroom, said she'd been trying to raise money for a greenhouse at the middle school for the last two years.

The Junior Farmers

of America club (not a part of any national organization like the FFA, McElroy said, but a middle school agricultural club she formed five years ago) donated a portion of JFA funds for Andrade's project.

Andrade raised the rest.

"He thought that would be a good thing for him to do, and it's kind of a joint effort," McElroy, who has been teaching seventh grade science at the middle school for the last five years, said.

"She's [McElroy] the one that asked me about it, and she suggested I could do that for her," Andrade, who transferred from the Christian Academy of Lawrenceburg last year, said. "They'll use [the greenhouse] to grow plants, learn about agriculture."

McElroy said she hopes to use the greenhouse for a future JFA greenhouse sale, much like the one the high school FFA sponsors. The skills the middle school students learn at the middle school greenhouse will also help their transition if they take any similar agricultural classes at the high school, she said.

Even though McElroy will be gone from the classroom on maternity leave, she said she plans to come back to help JFA students in planting and using the greenhouse "just so they can see the fruits of their labor."

"I want the kids to see it before they leave, especially the eighth graders and especially Jeremiah," McElroy said.

McElroy said she's thinking of planting marigold seeds for a spring sale.

Magistrate calls for change at Three Corners intersection

Citing lack of wrecks, state declines to change 'dangerous' road's sharp curves

By Meaghan Downs
News staff

The intersection at Three Corners is an accident waiting to happen.

No recent injury collisions have occurred where Hammond Road, Ninevah Road and Highway 326 meet, but they will, Magistrate David Montgomery said.

Change at the Three Corners will happen when someone gets killed in the intersection, he said.

"The way I'm looking at that, [the Transportation Cabinet's] going to have to wait until a really bad accident happens before they'll do anything, and I don't agree with that," the 5th District magistrate said.

Back in November 2012, the fiscal court's transportation committee met to discuss solutions to improve safety at the intersection.

Including one particularly "dangerous" blind spot, according to Montgomery, for those drivers traveling north from Ninevah Road to Highway 326, or heading south into town from Highway 326.

Ninevah Christian Church, located between Ninevah and Hammond Roads, has grown in the last decade, Montgomery, and so have the subdivisions and the number of drivers visiting Lovers Leap Winery, about 2 miles from Three Corners.

"The church already has a second entrance and I've noticed that a lot of the traffic uses that entrance, which has helped," Kelli Buckley, a Ninevah Road resident and Ninevah Christian Church member, said via e-mail. "In all honesty, the church traffic is not that big of a problem, it's the all-day traffic that's using Hammond as a cut through to 127."

Montgomery agreed. "We've got a whole lot of new people coming and going, not just the residents," Montgomery said in a phone interview last week. "The residents out there know the curves, the curves' been there forever."

The local transportation committee proposed several solutions, from cutting back brush to installing warning signs to shaving off 15-20 feet of the problematic bank that can limit drivers' sight distance through the curve.

"That's the only solution, the way the bank is set up," Kelli Buckley's father-in-law Scott Buckley, who has lived at 1402 Ninevah Road for more than 30 years, said. "Shave the bank off."

"If they just sloped it out, it'd really make a difference," Scotty Buckley added. "I could do it in about two hours."

The Transportation Cabinet, since that November meeting, has sent work crews to mow the bank and remove vegetation, and should continue to do so through the summer months, according to traffic engineer Logan Baker.

Baker said the warning signs already out in the intersection didn't need any more work. There are enhancements that could have been done, Baker said, such as adding reflective yellow tape down some of the signs' posts, but doing so would make the warnings less effective in terms of improving safety.

"If we do that every where, then there's nothing left to enhance," Baker said. "It just becomes standard and that extra enhancement doesn't mean anything."

As for cutting down the bank? Not cost effective, according to the Transportation Cabinet.

"We have determined it is not beneficial to pursue any of the proposals to change the geometry of the curve," a Dec. 11 letter from the Transportation Cabinet to County Judge-

Executive John Wayne Conway said. "This would not be cost effective considering the absence of accident history, existing utilities in the area, and that sight distance is much improved for the intersection when the existing fence is kept clear of vegetation."

According to Anderson News reports from the November committee meeting, excavating and cutting back the bank would cost the Transportation Cabinet $20,000-30,000, not including the inevitable relocation of utilities.

State engineers also proposed in letter to work with the property owner to remove the old woven wire fence and posts to improve the sight line.

Ninevah Christian Church was already planning to remove the entrance that opens directly onto Hammond, decreasing traffic in the intersection, according to the document.

But the state avoided the real issue, Terry Cooper, senior minister at Ninevah Christian Church, said.

The real issue is visibility in the curve, he said, which would be improved by cutting down the bank.

After 13 years of dealing with Three Corners, he said he knows it's not an easy problem to fix.

If it were, the intersection would have been fixed the times the state has sent engineers out to Ninevah over the years, Cooper said. Or after hundreds of people submitted a petition to Kentucky state Sen. Julian Carroll to no result, he said.

"That would solve everything [cutting down the bank], but I think there is a landowner issue there," Cooper said of removing some of the inside curve's bank. "I can't believe that there isn't some reasonable action that could be taken by the state. I hate to think someone has to be killed in that intersection before there could be done something."

But according to Conway, it won't be possible to cut down the height of the bank because of existing utility lines and Conway's reluctance to take that piece of land away from Charlie Wilson, who owns the bank and adjoining acreage.

"I agree that the sight distance is better is that they're keeping it mowed down," Conway said, adding he went out in a smaller vehicle to test if there was better visibility in the inside curve. "We're still looking in to what we need to do to fix it on our end."

Because the upcoming fiscal year's budget has not been set yet, Conway said, he does not know how much or if any money will be allocated for improvements at Three Corners.

David Cartinhour, who lives about a mile and a half from Three Corners at 1557 Clifton Road, agrees with Buckley and Cooper in leveling the bank, but appreciates the cabinet and the fiscal court trying to come up with solutions.

"I guess we're going to have to live with it," Cartinhour, who has lived on Clifton for about seven years, said, but ... "shaving [the bank] or moving the utilities is a lot cheaper than somebody's life."

According to traffic engineer Baker, there haven't been any car accidents at the Three Corners intersection in recent years; the last reported crash he's found was in 2008, when a driver hit ice and slid off the road.

But does it matter if there is a lack of reported accidents if improvements would save someone's life?

"We get that question a lot," Baker said Monday morning. "While that is a valid concern, we do have places in the district where we are having problems, and those are the places we want to address first while being proactive in other places with signage, pavement striping and pavement rehab."

Property owners, and the magistrate, still wonder, however.

"They're [residents] just wondering about the same thing I'm wondering," Montgomery said.

"Does somebody have to get killed up there before they do something?"

Fiscal court approves bid for recycling building

Sims, Barnett oppose, say project too expensive

By Ben Carlson
News staff

Magistrates voted last Tuesday to award a bid to Lawrenceburg-based Walters Buildings to construct a new recycling building near the county highway facility.

The company's bid of $217,946 was the second lowest of several bids received, but the lowest bidder, Dadisman Builders, dropped out, according to Judge-Executive John Wayne Conway.

The bid was awarded by a 5-2 vote, with magistrates Kenny Barnett and Buddy Sims voting against the project.

"I still think it's too much money," said Sims, a recycling proponent who has urged the county to take slower, less expensive steps in building its recycling program.

"This started out as an $80,000 building and the first bids we received were for $670,000. That's too much money for the program at this time."

Barnett, who also says he supports recycling, shared Sims' thoughts.

"That's just more money than we need to spend on it, starting out," Barnett said. "I've said from the beginning this is something I'd like to build up over time and, as it grows, we can grow with it."

Both, however, voted last month to solicit bids for the building, which has been a touchy subject dating back to last year when the fiscal court received a solid waste grant that required it to build a structure.

That project grew quickly and resulted in initial building bids coming in at nearly $700,000 — double the amount the fiscal court approved to spend.

The latest bids were for a smaller, pole barn-styled building that had a maximum cost of $235,000.

Conway said he's happy to have bids come in under that level.

"I'm pretty well satisfied with it," Conway said. "I'm glad we have that out of the way."

The building is expected to be completed by June and will be the county's centerpiece in its burgeoning effort to upgrade its recycling facilities.

Once opened, the county is expected to end free curbside pickup of residential recyclables and place bins in collection points at school buildings and other locations around Lawrenceburg.

The county will continue to collect recyclables from businesses.

Conway said the fiscal court will likely go into debt for the building instead of paying cash. He said with interest rates at 2.58 percent, borrowing the money right now is cheap. He said the county will likely borrow the money on a 15-year term.

Boy Scouts to utilize park

The fiscal court gave permission for a local Boy Scout troop to use the community park for a variety of training opportunities during its meeting last Tuesday morning.

Judge-Executive John Wayne Conway said scouts will use it for kayaking, fishing, air rifle practice, archery, tent pitching, tomahawk throwing, basketball, street hockey, football, baseball, soccer, ambulance and first aid training and fire drills.

The scouts will also utilize the skateboard park as a bicycle obstacle course.

Address changes requested for Ballard Road

Four Ballard Road residences could receive new house numbers if a request from county Code Enforcement Officer Doug Ingram is approved next Tuesday by the fiscal court.

Affected residences will be 2101, 2134, 2201 and 2250. Ingram said the problem with those house numbers is that they are out of order with other numbers on that road.

"Not only are these numbers out of sequence, there are additional homes using 2000 numbers farther down Ballard Road. This can, and has, caused confusion for EMS, fire and law enforcement in the past, and will continue to cause response delays in the future if not corrected," Ingram said in a letter to residences.

If approved by the fiscal court, those residences will comprise a "1500" block on Ballard Road.

The fiscal court is expected to consider the issue when it meets March 18 at 6 p.m.

Need the light of Christ to drive out the darkness

“...God is light, and in him is no darkness at all.” (1 John 1:5) Craig Larson tells the story of an old desert nomad who awoke one night to a growling stomach. He lit a candle and began eating dates from a bowl beside his bed. He took a bite from one end and saw a worm in it, so he threw it from the tent. He bit into the second date, found another worm, and threw it away as well. Thinking that he wouldn't have any dates left to eat if he continued, he blew out the candle and ate the remaining dates. Larson then observes, “Many there are who prefer and darkness denial to light and reality.” God is holy. It is this holiness that is his standard for his people (1 Peter 1:16). Our first parents, however, rejected this standard in the Garden of Eden, and it is still being rejected today. God will not wink at man's rebellion like a grandparent will often overlook their grandchild's disobedience. God calls all people everywhere to repent of their sins and trust Christ for salvation (Acts 17:30-31); we need the righteousness of Christ to make us right with God (2 Corinthians 5:21). Salvation cannot be earned through our own efforts (Ephesians 2:8-9). The Bible says that there isn't the slightest hint of darkness in God; this cannot be said about us. The Bible says that our self-righteousness is filth rags (Isaiah 64:6). No matter how clean we think our house is, the light of God's holiness reveals the dust and cobwebs that lay hidden in the shadows and corners! You may ask, “Is there hope in darkness?” Yes there is! John 1:4 says that “in [Jesus Christ] was life, and the life was the light of men. The light shines in the darkness, and the darkness has not overcome it.” Jesus is the light that can drive out darkness of our hearts! You may wonder “why, then, is there is so much darkness in our world?” Again, in John 3:19-21 we read, “And this is the judgment: the light has come into the world, and people loved the darkness rather than the light because their works were evil. For everyone who does wicked things hates the light and does not come to the light, lest his works should be exposed. But whoever does what is true comes to the light, so that it may be clearly seen that his works have been carried out in God.” Christ has come and revealed the light of God to humanity. Yet, how many of us are like that little, old nomad, choosing to remain in the darkness rather than deal with the reality of worms in our dates? As 18th century Baptist preacher Charles Spurgeon once said, “May it not involve more sin to have the light and not to act upon it than to be in the dark altogether?” The Light has come! Now come to the Light! Come to Christ! Repent and believe the Gospel!

Brian Owen

Birdwhistell named pastor at Texas church
Calvary Baptist Church in Waco, Texas, recently named Mary Alice Birdwhistell its new associate pastor. She currently serves as the church's children's minister and will begin her new role on April 1. Birdwhistell is a native of Lawrenceburg and is the daughter of

Mark and Martha Birdwhistell. Birdwhistell, who is scheduled to graduate in May with her master's of divinity degree from George W. Truett Theological Seminary, earned a bachelor's degree in English from Georgetown College in Georgetown, Ky., in 2009. Birdwhistell joined Calvary as children's minister in September 2009. “God has used Mary Alice to speak to this congregation both through her words and her person. We are blessed to have ministering to us, for us and with us,” according to Jim Coston, who has been senior pastor at Calvary since August 2009, in the church's press release. Calvary was the first Baptist church in Texas to have a female as its senior pastor. Julie Pennington-Russell held that role from August 1998 until 2007, when she became senior pastor at First Baptist Church of Decatur, Ga. Birdwhistell said in the press release that when she came to Waco to visit Truett Seminary, “I really was just visiting to rule it out, because there was no way I was going to move to Texas. Now, Waco has become home to me, this community has become family to me and I wouldn't have it any other way. “The people at Calvary believed in me, challenged me, and over the past three-and-a-half years, equipped me to be their pastor,” Birdwhistell said in the church's press release. “Being called to be the associate pastor at Calvary is a sacred reminder of the gift they have entrusted to me, a gift they have helped me to discover, unwrap and begin to life out. For that, I am and will always be so very grateful.”

ADAM'S SINS AND MINE

All of us have things around the house that we have inherited from family members. These prized possession have a special place in our heart because of whom we received them. I have a biscuit cutter and rolling pin that my mother made biscuits with when I was a young boy, and sweet memories come to mind every time I see these objects.

There is one thing that we cannot inherit and that is sin. John Calvin, a number of years ago began teaching, inheriteds in, and many denominations have swallowed his false teaching hook, line and sinker. Adam's sins separated HIM from God, but his sins did not separate me from God. I would agree that Adam's sins had consequences (“sin entered into the world” - Rom. 5:12), but I am not responsible for anything that Adam did. I am however responsible for MY sins and MINEa lone.

Ezekiel 1 8:19-20 “Yet you say, ‘Why should the son not bear the guilt of the father?’ Because the son has done what is lawful and right, and has kept My statutes and observed them, he shall surely live. The soul who sins shall die. The son shall not bear the guilt of the father, nor the father bear the guilt of the son. The righteousness of the righteous shall be upon himself, and the wickedness of the wicked shall be upon himself.” See also Romans 2:6-9 where the apostle Paul is told to write that God will render to each according “to his deeds.” Don't forget 2 Cor. 5:10.

GIRLS' SWEET SIXTEEN COVERAGE

'We can do this'

Mellowing Kays keeps faith, leads Lady Bearcats to state tourney

Tony Kays never showed any sign of panic last Wednesday. Not once. Not even for a nanosecond. "He kept telling us, 'We can still do this,'" Anderson County senior Kali Whiteside said.

John Herndon
Sports Editor

Indeed. All season long, the Lady Bearcats had been considered one of the state's best teams. After a monstrous December, Anderson moved up to No. 2 in the state and earned the tag as the team to beat in the Eighth Region. Yet, there the Lady Bearcats were, staring at a 10-point deficit with 90 seconds to play.

"We can do this." It might not have been Kays' reaction 10, maybe even five, years ago. "He was definitely calmer than I was that last 1:18," says Kays' wife,

Susan. "I knew he wasn't that calm on the inside, but I think the last thing he wanted the girls to think was that he thought they were beat."

Those last 90 seconds of regulation and then the 4-minute overtime, when Anderson overcame Simon Kenton, might have been highlight reel in which Kays has done a masterful job guiding the Lady Bearcats to a 32-1 record and their second Sweet 16 berth in four years.

Part of Kays' growth has undoubtedly been a result of the wealth of talent at his disposal.

But part of it has to stem from a decision Kays made last year to retire from teaching. Technically, he's a para-professional coach. Kays gave up teaching physical education after 32 years, but stayed on the sideline where his blood runs deep.

"He just seems happier," smiles Anderson junior Alex Avritt.

"I have more energy every day," Kays admits. "When you are teaching

Henderson should be tough opener

Guard-oriented Lady Colonels will be major first-round test

It's called the luck of the draw. But for this week's Girls' Sweet 16, you could understand if Anderson County and Henderson County start singing like those old guys from "Hee Haw."

If it weren't for bad luck, I'd have no luck at all.

OK. Maybe they would not go that far. After all, it is the Sweet 16. But the first game of the Wednesday night session will pit No. 2 Anderson County against No. 3 Henderson County. The teams have been entrenched in those positions behind No. 1 and undefeated Marion County for most of the season.

Even though his team would supposedly benefit from a seeding that would put the Lady Bearcats against one of the weaker teams in the field - and in the bracket opposite Marion - Anderson County coach Tony Kays would not change a thing.

"I like the draw," he said. "When you have a game like this one in the first round, it creates excitement. If you are good enough to advance, when you get to the state, you are going to have to play two or three of these games anyway."

So, with that luck playing a major role in the bracket - the two Louisville teams, Mercy and Manual, also drew each other in the first round - two of the best teams will not make it to the round of eight on Friday.

Kays says that for Anderson to be playing Friday afternoon, the Lady Bearcats will have to overcome a Henderson County team that will create some major challenges.

"I had the opportunity to see Henderson County when they played Marion County," Kays said of Marion's 67-40 win on Feb. 9. Kays said Marion was a buzz-saw that day and it might not have been a fair assessment of Henderson.

Kays also noted that when the snow postponed the Eighth Region final, some of his assistant coaches attended Henderson's 49-47 win over University Heights in the Region 2 final at Caldwell County.

"They are very solid and very athletic," he said. "They have pretty much dominated their

Lady Bearcats reach Destination Diddle

Miraculous rally leads to OT win in regional final

By John Herndon

GOSHEN - With only 90 seconds left in the journey, it looked like Anderson County was still 10 miles from Diddle.

"Things weren't looking good," Lady Bearcat coach Tony Kays smiled.

But somehow, the Lady Bearcats found a way to get to Bowling Green.

Anderson rallied from a 61-51 deficit to force overtime. The Lady Bearcats scored 10 points in 40 seconds.

Read that again: Ten points. Forty seconds.

They then prevailed in the extra period when Eriel McKee sank a jump shot in the lane with 16 seconds remaining in overtime, sending the Lady Bearcats past a great Simon Kenton team, 70-68, in the Eighth Region championship game at North Oldham High School.

The Lady Bearcats will be making their second Sweet 16 trip in four years and only the fourth in school history. They will play Second Region champion Henderson County, ranked No. 3 in the state by some polls, tonight, March 13 at 7:30 p.m. at Diddle Arena on the campus of Western Kentucky University.

The Lady Bearcats made it to Diddle with one that will be remembered for the ages in Anderson County hoops lore.

Despite being on the wrong end of the score since the second quarter, Kays kept reminding his team the game is 32 minutes long. The Lady Bearcats actually needed 36 to complete the trip, but who's counting?

"He told us to not give up and to keep believing," McKee said of Kays' words. "He said the game wasn't over yet."

"It was the same thing as in the first quarter, the second quarter and the third quarter," Kays said. "I said to keep playing hard and we can get a flurry."

Flurry? After Simon Kenton took a 61-51 lead with 1:30 to go, it looked like the Lady Bearcats would need an avalanche. They got it in the form of a relentless press that finally took its toll on an obviously fatigued Simon Kenton team and the Pioneers' inability to hit free throws in the final 90 seconds.

"I wasn't feeling good at all," Simon Kenton coach Jeff Stowers said. "I have always told my girls to play all the way down to the last minute. We know that from playing Anderson over the years, they are going to keep after you. We had a couple of incidents where we didn't play through."

"I think Anderson might have wanted it just a little more than we did."

McKee, who led all scorers with 24 points, scored eight in the final 1:30. Twice she stole the ball and converted. She was scoreless in the extra period until she got the ball near the free

The changes from 2010 are not just apparent. They are striking.

It was three years ago this week that Anderson County made its last appearance in the girls' Sweet 16 with a team that was largely made up of players who had not even matriculated to the high school.

Sure, three starters were high schoolers, but people were buzzing about "those eighth-graders."

Two of them, Eriel McKee and Makenzie Cann, were starters. Several others played significant minutes for the Lady

Brette Elliott

Elliott named to KCSAA all-star team

Christian Academy of Lawrenceburg volleyball player Brette Elliott was selected to the North Region All-Star team by the Kentucky Christian Schools Athletic Association. She was to play in a KCSAA-sponsored tournament in Somerset last weekend.

Players are selected to the teams based on their performance during the regular season, according to Lady Ram coach Meghan Bowling. Christian Academy finished with a 6-8 record.

Elliott was selected to the team "for her outstanding serve and her commitment to the team and her overall positive attitude," Bowling said in a press release. A freshman, Elliott is the first Christian Academy player to be named to a volleyball all-star team in the 17-year existence of the school.

"Brette is one of the most humble, hard-working young ladies you could ever be around," Bowling said in the release. "If it was left up to Brette, no one would know that she was selected as CAL's very first volleyball all-star. Not only is she an exceptional student-athlete but she is equally as terrific as a young Christian woman. She has a monster serve, an awesome sports 'attitude' and is incredibly supportive of her teammates. I am excited to have the opportunity to coach her for three more years."

Avritt, Stewart major keys to Lady Cat success

By John Herndon
Sports Editor

The scorebook will not tell what Destiny Stewart and Alex Avritt have meant to Anderson County's success this girls' basketball season.

When the Lady Bearcats defeated Simon Kenton in the Eighth Region championship game last week, neither scored. On the year, they have combined for just over seven points and three rebounds a game.

But there is one stat that does matter: They have started all 33 games in a season that has seen Anderson put together a 32-1 record. That is all that counts to them.

Avritt and Stewart just happen to be the ones in the starting lineup from a group that includes Kaci Currens, Libby Pike, Jessica Rice, Corrin Robinson and Marissa Walker. Most would be starting at most schools in the area, but instead, they have been key members of one of Kentucky's top girls' basketball squads.

"Everyone has their role on the team," says Avritt, a junior who permanently cracked the starting lineup for the first time this year. "Every role is important. If we all realize that, then we are fine."

Stewart, another junior, made her way into the first five two years ago as a freshman. She might be noticed a bit more than Avritt simply because Stewart's job as point guard is to handle the ball and distribute. "I feel like everyone is important," she says. "It's not just one person. It's the entire team being building blocks to be as good as we are."

Stewart and Avritt are just two of a deep roster of nice players who have deferred to their more high profile teammates, Makenzie Cann, Eriel McKee and Kali Whiteside. But without each doing their jobs, Anderson would not be able to employ the high-pressure defense that has worn opponents down many times over the year, including the regional final.

Stewart has never been a big scorer despite the fact that she is one of Anderson's best outside shooters, hitting better than 36 percent of her shots from downtown. "We all know she can shoot it, but she defers to the team," Anderson coach Tony Kays notes.

In the 30th District Tournament final, Stewart made Collins pay for a triangle-and-two defense designed to slow McKee and Cann. Stewart swished three bombs early to force Collins out of the combo defense. Even back in middle school, when this year's juniors won the state tournament, it was Stewart who came up big in the middle school state championship game.

"At first, I was a little concerned about Destiny this year," Kays admits. "We felt we had 10 or 12 kids who can play, so her playing time went down. She was OK with that, but I wanted her to be more determined and to fight for more playing time."

"Then, I realized Destiny was doing it for the team. The team is the most important thing to her."

Just being on the team took a new meaning to Stewart last year. Anderson was rolling along at 8-3 and leading highly-regarded Casey County in the Mercer County Christmas Clash. Stewart went down with a knee injury.

Suffering ligament damage, Stewart was unable to return to the lineup the rest of the year. Anderson finished 24-6, but the loss of the playmaker was one from which the Lady Bearcats could not recover.

"That was really tough," says Stewart, who was able to recover without surgery. "It really bothered me when we lost in the first round of the region last year. It was just really hard and I don't want that to happen again."

Avritt, on the other hand, is Anderson's enforcer. She's that tough, get-dirty girl who has risen to the occasion defensively. Her willingness to work on that part of the game has allowed Kays to use her, not McKee, to guard the other team's best player. So far it has worked.

"Defense is my main thing," Avritt says. "I want to make sure I play good defense and make the hustle plays."

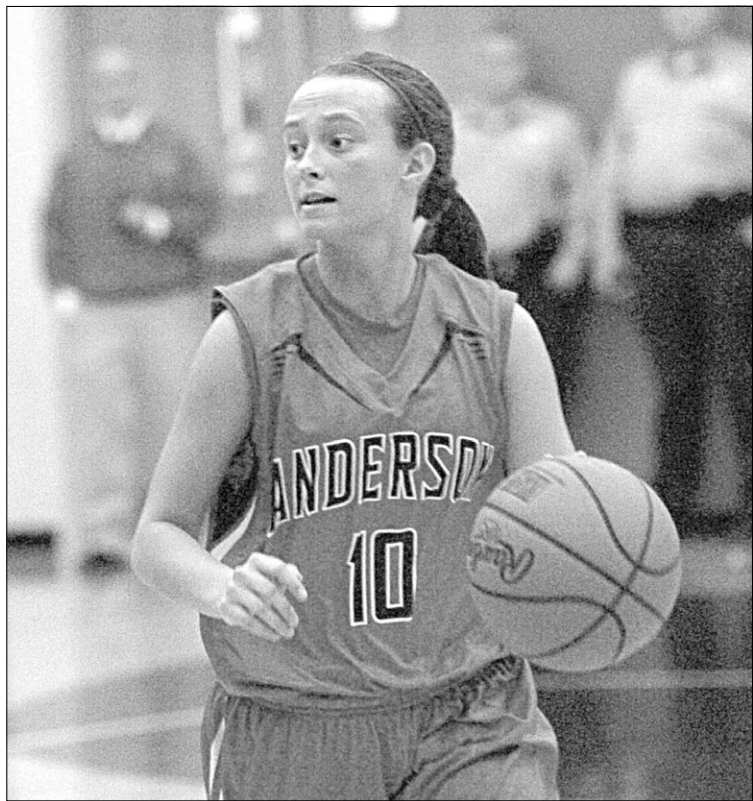

Kays smiled at the thought of Avritt accepting the challenge of guarding Oldham County's high-scoring Ashley McMurtrey in the regional semifinals. The Oldham star scored just five points.

"Alex is so competitive," Kays says. "She knows her defense is what gets her on the court."

Like Stewart, Avritt is not one-dimensional. She can pop the three-pointer at times and has the best free throw percentage (72.4) of all the Anderson starters.

"I have had people in our district comment on how well our role players mesh," Kays says. "On any given night, Alex, or Destiny or Corrin Robinson can score 15 points."

Wednesday night, Stewart will be called upon to set the Anderson offense against a Henderson County team that thrives on its defensive pressure. "We think she will be fine," Kays says.

Destiny Stewart sets the Anderson offense in the second half against Simon Kenton.

Avritt found out during Friday's practice that she will most likely be guarding Henderson star Ellie Fruit when the game starts. "She knows what her role will be," Kays says. It's all for the good of the team.

Pike celebrates 18th with birthday win

By John Herndon
Sports Editor

Only 90 seconds stood between Libby Pike and a sour end to her 18th birthday.

The Anderson County backup center was watching from the bench as Simon Kenton forged its second 10-point lead of the the girls' Eighth Region Tournament championship game, but the senior kept her hopes up.

"I had faith in us," Pike said. "I knew we could still come back."

Had the Lady Bearcats not made it all the way back, chances are Pike would remember one of those signature birthdays in one's life with a bad memory.

A key reserve who had given Anderson quality minutes in the second quarter of the final, Pike was cheering from the sidelines as her teammates pulled off a miraculous rally.

She, like her teammates, erupted when Eriel McKee's eventual game-winner fell through the net. "She came here to win," Pike said.

After the initial celebration when the Anderson student section rushed the court, the post-game awards ceremony had to wait. The student section broke out in an impromptu song.

Happy Birthday, dear Libby
Happy Birthday to you.

"I loved it," Pike said with a smile.

And a championship trophy as a present?

"It was the best ever!" Pike said.

Whiteside named MVP

Whiteside scored 17 points and pulled down 18 rebounds to lead the Lady Bearcats in the final.

She scored 36 points in three games and altered countless shots through the tourney. Teammates Makenzie Cann and Eriel McKee joined Whiteside on the team, selected by the tournament coaches.

Juniors get opportunity to shine

By John Herndon
Sports Editor

It might seem a bit strange to hear Anderson County girls' basketball coach Tony Kays refer to junior Eriel McKee as "one of the best-kept secrets in Kentucky."

After all, McKee is already the all-time leading girls' scorer at Anderson County and should pass her cousin, C.J. Penny, to rewrite the hoops record book, boys' or girls', sometime next season. She's been dominating the Eighth Region for the better part of five years now.

But her only statewide exposure has been in Anderson's short stay in the Sweet 16 in 2010. McKee is a much better player now and could catch the eye of a college recruiter with a big tournament this week.

McKee and her classmate, Makenzie Cann, could boost their profiles with the state's high school coaches and a bevy of college coaches taking in the big show in Bowling Green. Senior Kali Whiteside could also move up with a big tournament.

Cann is probably the best-known Anderson player, as she has played extensively in the AAU circuits over the years. "Most everyone knows Kenzie," Kays says.

Cann has scholarship offers from several Division I schools, including Cincinnati, Eastern Kentucky, Western Kentucky and Lipscomb, which has been recruiting her hard, according to Kays.

Several other schools have made offers too.

McKee, however, has not drawn as much buzz. It can be traced to McKee's size - she is a 5-10 forward - and her absence from last summer's AAU circuit. Most of the in-state smaller schools have made inquiries about McKee.

Kali Whiteside and Alex Avritt (24) get tangled up with Simon Kenton's Kelsey Schmiade. Whiteside has drawn interest from several colleges but could get more attention with a big tourney this week.

Both Cann and McKee could make their cases for consideration for Miss Basketball in 2014 as well.

Whiteside has gone from a "project" to a polished post player. She has several offers from in-state schools, with Asbury making a big push. Georgetown and Thomas More are also trying to woo Whiteside as is Vincennes Junior College in Indiana.

"We will be playing on a longer court and they will see how Kali runs the floor," Kays said.

Anderson will be heading to Diddle Arena with winning tournament games as the main goal but a good tournament from individual players could open some doors.

Kays drew from the school Anderson defeated in the Eighth Region final. Back in 1981, Simon Kenton surprised the state by winning the boys' Sweet 16. The virtually unheard of Troy McKinley led the Pioneers to the title.

Kays remembers. "McKinley had a great tournament and after they won it, he had a scholarship to UK. Sometimes that just happens."

Sweet 16 is different than any other game

By John Herndon
Sports editor

Even before a team gets to the state tournament it is apparent things are just different when there are only 16 high school basketball teams from across the state still playing the game.

Just getting there is a huge deal, no matter how often it happens. How big? Anderson County's girls' basketball team was met by a police escort when it got to the Franklin County line on the way back from North Oldham High School last Wednesday.

Since then, head coach Tony Kays has been fielding calls from media across the state, something that does not happen during the regular season. He's had several interviews with The Anderson News since last Wednesday.

There are advance ticket sales, spirit gear sales and a pep rally to send the Lady Bearcats off to Bowling Green was planned for Tuesday afternoon.

Teams will sleep in hotels and eat at restaurants for the duration of the trip. Most teams have not done that during the season.

Those off the court differences are expected. It is how teams handle some of the on-the court differences that will play a major role in how well they play in Diddle Arena.

The court is longer.

A regulation high school court is 84 feet long and 50 feet wide. Playing on a college floor, like Diddle, adds 10 feet to the floor's length. Conventional wisdom is that favors more athletic teams or teams with longer benches.

Media influence

In the Sweet 16, media timeouts are built into the schedule, just like TV timeouts for college basketball. At the Sweet 16, the timeouts are set at the first dead ball after the 3:00 mark in each quarter. That can play a role in momentum and certainly is a consideration when a coach is considering a time out with the break approaching.

There are other differences in regard to the media. A sideline reporter will be there for the statewide radio network and coaches will be expected to talk with him at halftime. During the regular season, district and regional tournament games utilize a 10-minute halftime. At the state, it is 15 minutes.

The good thing for all teams is the differences are the same for everyone. How they all handled the changes will play a role in crowning a state champion Saturday night.

throw lane, then drove into traffic, but rose above the Simon Kenton defense. The eventual game-winner was true.

"I felt good," Kays said of his thoughts when McKee rose, practically uncontested, for the game-winner. "That is her shot right there in the lane. She wanted the ball."

Simon Kenton had one final chance. Junior guard Abby Owings hurried to get a shot off but it was well off the mark with four seconds to play.

In the mad scramble that ensued, Anderson's Kali Whiteside and Destiny Stewart kept the ball alive until the buzzer sounded.

As the ball bounded away from the goal and the horn sounded, Anderson players, coaches and fans flooded the floor in a wild celebration that signified the destination had been reached.

Whiteside, named the tournament's Most Valuable Player, had gone to war through the entire contest. She finished with 17 points and 18 rebounds. "Kali carried us throughout the game," Kays said. "She kept us close in the first quarter, second quarter. She was tremendous. Her defense, her rebounding. She wants the ball around the basket now."

"I was ready to go," Whiteside said. "I didn't want this to be my last game."

Anderson, now 32-1 and winners of 24 straight games, had led 17-15 after the first quarter, but Simon Kenton went on a 9-0 run in the first two minutes of the second frame. The Pioneers led 34-26 at the half, as Owings was virtually unstoppable. The 5-foot-2 junior had 17 points hitting three 3-point shots.

That Anderson limited Owings to five second half points - none in the extra period - played a big role in the Lady Bearcats' win. McKee, Alex Avritt, Corrin Robinson and Marissa Walker all took their turns at slowing the Simon Kenton dynamo.

"She is a very good player," Robinson said. "We were lucky enough to shut her down."

After Owings hit the first of two free throws to put her team up 59-49 with 3:15 to play, Simon Kenton hit two of its last eight charity tosses. Two of those misses were the front end of bonus situations.

Down 61-51, Robinson started the miraculous rally with a drive into the lane at the 1:20 mark. Eight seconds later, McKee converted a steal. After an Anderson timeout, McKee struck again with another steal and layup.

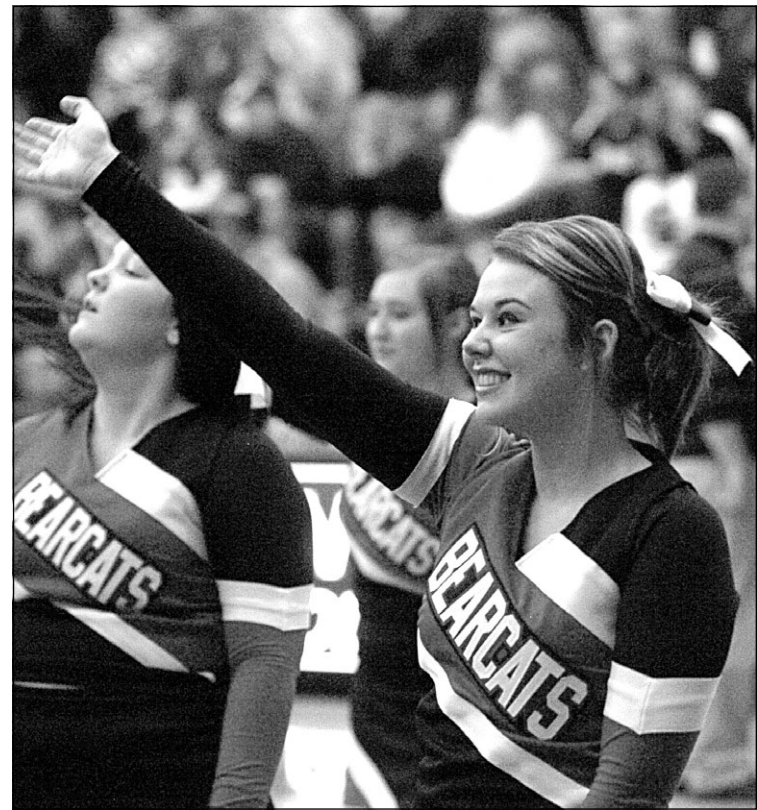

Another drive through the lane by McKee to make it 61-59.

After Owings missed two free throws, Robinson went to the line to calmly sink a pair that tied things with 39.4 seconds to go.

Nervous? "Just a little bit, but I was confident in my shot and knew I had to hit them," Robinson said.

After a turnover, McKee drove for a basket that gave Anderson its first lead since the first quarter, but Cook had a chance to redeem herself with a running flip that tied things at 63 with 11.9 seconds to go. Cook missed a chance at a 3-point play but in a wild scramble for the rebound, Simon Kenton came up with the ball, then was forced to try for a game-winner on an out-of-bounds play with 0:00.9 showing on the game clock.

Simon Kenton got a quick lead in the overtime almost negating Simon Kenton's obvious fatigue and Anderson's momentum.

Anderson County cheerleader Taylor Boggs fires up the crowd as the Lady Bearcats rallied against Simon Kenton in the Eighth Region final.

But with Anderson trailing and only 2:31 left, Cann came up with a steal and layup to draw Anderson within one.

Paige Bosse, who scored 14 points, connected in the lane, but Cann answered with a 3-pointer with 1:19 to play.

The Pioneers missed a layup at the 1:00 mark setting up the wild finish.

"You have to tip your hat to Anderson," Stowers said. "They played all the way through the game."

Whiteside could only break into a big smile when asked about the apparent impossible detour to Diddle. "I was thinking, 'We can still do this.'"

Bearcats. There was even a seventh-grader, Corrin Robinson, on the roster.

A picture of that team is the first thing anyone sees when entering Lady Bearcat coach Tony Kays' office at the school. It was taken moments after they had beaten Simon Kenton for the school's first Sweet 16 trip in 32 years.

Most of the kids look like, well, middle schoolers. In Bowling Green, they ran into a big, tough and experienced Clay County team that was making its second straight Sweet 16 appearance and fourth trip in five years.

Clay eventually went on to extend that streak to four straight regional crowns and six in seven years.

"We were eighth-graders and just happy to be there," says Cann. "We are juniors now and there is a big difference."

Physically, the Lady Bearcats have matured. They look like young women who are now able to drive and are already thinking about prom night.

On the court, the change is just as obvious. This year's team wears red uniforms on the road as opposed to the navy blue threads they wore three years ago. More importantly, the girls who were pushed around by the rugged mountain team can now dish it out with the best of them.

And this time, Anderson is supposed to be there. The Eighth Region dynasty that was assumed in 2010 has never fully materialized, but Anderson has been ranked among the state's best teams since before the 2013 season started. Whereas the Lady Bearcats pulled an upset over Simon Kenton to win the region in 2010, they avoided the upset in overtime last week.

"Some of them don't even look like the same girls, do they?"

If anything, just getting to the state in 2010, then the disappointments of the following two years when they lost regional tournament games in the last seconds, sweetens things. The Lady Bearcats have known nothing but success from the time it came together at

Anderson County Middle School.

Through those middle school years, this year's junior class never lost a game to players their own age. As eighth-graders, they rolled through the middle school state tournament and were never seriously challenged on their way to a championship they won at Rupp Arena.

In fact, just a few days after that win over Whitley County Middle School, Cann and McKee led the Lady Bearcats to a season-opening win over a good Lafayette team.

Along the way, though, this current Lady Cat team has learned no matter how much success it has, the March losses leave a lasting sting. Two years ago, it was Walton-Verona hitting a shot inside the last 15 seconds to pull off a one-point win in the regional final. Last year it was Simon Kenton, a program that might have become Anderson's fiercest rival over the last five years, ending things on the Lady Bearcats' home court.

"I think it means a lot more to me now, not because I am playing more, but because I am older," says junior forward Alex Avritt, who saw all of 29 seconds of playing time at the state in 2010. Now she starts and is often charged with guarding the opponent's best player.

"It's different," adds guard Destiny Stewart, who will be wearing a different jersey number Wednesday night than she did three years ago. "I have a bigger role this time. We all have bigger roles."

Back in 2010, Cann scored 20 points at Diddle Arena, but McKee, nursing an ankle sprain suffered in the regional final, scored only three after getting in early foul trouble.

Three years ago, the unquestioned leader was senior Kara Yeaste, who was named the regional tournament's Most Valuable Player. The other starters were Caroline McDowell and Sydney Brown.

Unlike then, this Anderson team is given a shot at going deep into the tournament. Most observers have penned in - not penciled - unbeaten Marion County, 35-0 and ranked in the Top 10 nationally, as a shoo-in for the championship with everyone else fighting for second place.

The problem for Anderson is that it can't take second, if Marion wins. While the winner of the Anderson-Henderson County game will be a solid favorite in the quarter-final round, Marion potentially awaits in Saturday morning's semi-final.

Many figured Marion would be a state-wide dynasty, but the Lady Knights have come up short in Bowling Green the last three years. Last March, they fell in the championship game to Manual.

"Marion County is as talented as I have seen in a long time," Kays says. Marion boasts Kentucky signees Makayla Epps and Kyvin Goodin-Rogers and is talented through the lineup.

"They seem to be very focused and realize this is their last chance," Kays said. "On the other side of the bracket, you have Mercy and Manual playing in the first game, but both of them could come out of the bracket."

Anderson would love to get a chance at both. While Kays admits he has been trying to get film on possible opponents down the tournament road, he says, "We have to play Henderson County first. They are very talented and will be quite a challenge."

In other words, the Lady Bearcats can't win it all, or even get a shot at Marion, without winning the first one.

region over the last 10 years."

This will be Henderson's 10th trip to the girls' Sweet 16. Ironically, their last trip came in 2010, the same year Anderson last made it. That year, Henderson defeated Louisville Butler in the first round but fell to eventual state champion Mercy in the quarterfinals. Anderson was ousted by Clay County in the first round.

Coach Jeff Haile is in his 27th year at the helm. One of his assistants is Phil Gibson, who guided the Henderson County boys from 1995-2007 and led the Colonels to the Sweet 16 in 1996.

The Lady Colonels were considered the Region 2 favorite from the outset and The Cats' Pause rated seniors Ellie Fruit and Brooke Tapp as the top two players in the region.

"We have had the bull's eye on our back all season, especially with the high ranking," Haile said in an e-mail. "We are the big school around this area - 2,000 students - so we are used to teams wanting to beat us."

"Fruit is a really nice player," Kays said of the Second Region Player of the Year. "She sees the court well and shoots it well. She is the one they want the ball in her hands."

A four-year starter, Fruit played on Henderson's state tournament team in 2010. She's really a guard but Henderson is not blessed with much size, so she has played the power forward most of the year.

Tapp, who will be playing collegiate basketball at Wabash Valley Junior College, tore her anterior cruciate ligament playing AAU ball in the summer and was not expected to return this season. She was able to make it back on Jan. 5 but has been seeing action in the sixth-man role.

"She is back, but sees limited time, only about 75 percent ready," Haile said.

Sophomore Maci Brown is the Colonels' top three-point threat, hitting five in the second half against University Heights.

Point guard Samantha Carter and center DeAsia Outlaw are very solid. "Outlaw is built a lot like Eriel (McKee)," Kays said, comparing the Henderson sophomore to his own player. "They are both thin, slashing-type players."

Haile said he has seen Anderson several times this season, including the regional final against Simon Kenton last Wednesday. "I know they have a great team," he said.

Kays says that while Anderson might be a bit bigger than Henderson, his team will have its hands full. "They are very similar to us," he said. "They play a lot of people and are very sound fundamentally."

and coaching, you are in the classroom from 7-3. You have students and you have to check on them and work on teaching because that comes first.

"Then you are coaching from after school until late at night. If you are scouting, you are out so late and then you have to be back at school in the morning.

"It has been nice. I have been doing this for 33 years now. I probably don't yell and scream as much. Part of that is that I feel the team is better prepared. I have delegated responsibilities to the assistants. That has taken a lot of decisions off my mind. I feel comfortable and relaxed."

There is no question about that. While it would be a mistake to say he's void of emotion, Kays' demeanor through the season has undoubtedly boosted the confidence his team has shown through the year.

Most of the time, the Lady Bearcats have been so far ahead that he's been able to sit back and enjoy the final minutes of games. But even then, there is no question that lack of effort or attention to detail is not tolerated.

Thirty-two minutes of excellence is expected. It took that, plus four more, for the Lady Bearcats to be playing in Diddle Arena.

"I have been coaching girls' basketball for a while now," says Kays, who took over the reins of the Anderson program in the 1999-2000 school year. "One of my goals was to coach the girls like you do the boys."

The expectations are now high around the Lady Bearcat program. Anderson has been to five of the last six regional finals.

Yet, those who have seen Anderson basketball over the years will tell you things are different.

And better.

"I think (Kays) has changed tremendously," says first-year assistant coach Courtney Milam. "When I played for him, he wasn't scared to yell and get in my face when I made a bad pass or had a stupid foul. Now when I watch him, he has definitely mellowed out."

Milam was the cornerstone of Kays' first regional finalist in 2008. She completed her college career at St. Catharine College last year and is completing her requirements in order to teach. She hopes to be working with the Lady Bearcats for a while.

Bringing Milam aboard was a major plus for the program. While Kays has had female staff members before, it had been a while since one worked with the varsity. Part of her job has been to work with post players, but part has been to just be a "good cop."

"She has been a liaison," Kays says. "She is just out of college and age-wise, she is close. The girls trust her."

"As we can all imagine, high school girls can be a handful," Milam says. "I think having a girl coach has definitely helped them this year...Heaven knows they won't go talk to Coach Kays about their girl problems."

Assistant coach Clay Birdwhistell is in charge of the Anderson offense while Nick Cann handles the defense.

It has been an unforgettable ride for Kays this year, but not one that has gone off without a hitch. Last fall, his step-father was diagnosed with cancer. He passed away on Jan. 14.

"It has been a very difficult time for his mom," Susan Kays says. "Her husband was a very kind man and had been wonderful to Tony's mom. Naturally, when our parents are going through a hard time, it carries over into our lives."

"It was a rough winter, but I think basketball was such a bright spot for him that in a way, it carried us through that hard time. Things are much better and she is so excited and proud of Tony."

Down deep Kays knows he has been blessed in a way few coaches are.

Not only do the Lady Bearcats have an abundance of talent, he often marvels at their chemistry on and off the court.

They have put together one of the greatest seasons in Anderson County history, regardless of school, regardless of sport.

It will end sometime this week, possibly Wednesday night.

But Tony Kays will still be a happy man.

"I have been coaching 33 years," he says with a smile. "It has been really rewarding to know that I am in the latter stages of my career and have a team like this."

White bass runs coming in the next few weeks

By Lee McClellan

Ky. Dept. of Fish & Wildlife Resources

Some old-time anglers in Kentucky say the white bass run when the red-bud trees bloom in spring. Others say they run when the dogwoods bloom. Fisheries biologists say don't watch the trees, watch the water temperatures.

"White bass begin their spring spawning runs when the water temperatures reach the low 50s," said Gerry Buynak, assistant director of fisheries for the Kentucky Department of Fish and Wildlife Resources. "It is just around the corner."

Water temperatures are in the high 40s right now. This means white bass could be showing up in the headwaters of Cave Run Lake, Herrington Lake, Nolin River Lake, Lake Cumberland and in the Green and Kentucky rivers within a couple of weeks. White bass need warming water and good flow, not flood waters, to make their spawning runs.

When the white bass make their run, the water in the narrow headwaters of these lakes and the tailwaters below the locks and dams turns frothy. White bass pin schools of baitfish against the surface and rip through them, creating a situation anglers call the "jumps." While in the jumps, any shad-imitating lure thrown into the melee usually gets crushed with a few moments.

This exciting fishing is the reason generations of Kentuckians look forward each spring to catch a limit of white bass. There really is no other fishing like it in the state.

The Kentucky River is one of the overlooked white bass destinations in Kentucky since a stocking program that ran from 2006 to 2010 bolstered their moribund populations in the river.

"White bass are reproducing in the Kentucky River when conditions are right," Buynak explained. "That was a goal of the stocking program to get reproducing populations of white bass back in the river."

The white bass fishing below the 14 locks and dams on Kentucky River may heat up a little earlier than other waters if we have warm days and rains in the next couple of weeks. White bass also have productive runs up the first few miles of major tributaries such as Elkhorn Creek in central Kentucky.

Nolin River Lake has arguably the best population of white bass in Kentucky. They congregate in the upper lake above Bacon Creek and run as far upstream as Wheeler's Mill from early March to early April.

Boating just upstream of Bacon Creek is nearly impossible as the Nolin River returns to its natural, rocky shallow state just upstream of this ramp.

The white bass runs up the Dix River from Herrington Lake drew anglers from near and far during their heyday in the 1940s and 1950s.

Old Ford and Chevy trucks with huge white walled tires, stepside beds and rounded features lined the shoulders of KY 52 on both sides of the Dix River Bridge during that time. Anglers lined the bank of the Dix River in Rankin Bottoms in Herrington's extreme headwaters, casting minnows suspended under brown cork bobbars with metal fishing rods and catching fat white bass after fat white bass.

The fishery bottomed out in the late 1990s and early 2000s, like white bass populations across the southeastern United States. A return to more typical spring rains have Kentucky Fish and Wildlife fisheries biologists believing the glory days are back. They see many fish in the 14-inch range in their population sampling with larger fish present.

Anglers may access excellent bank fishing in Rankin Bottoms via the Rankin Bottoms Voluntary Public Access Area near the KY 52 Bridge over Dix River between Lancaster and Danville.

Cave Run Lake has many white bass in the 12- to 14-inch range with many larger fish in the population. The headwaters area of the lake from Beaver Creek upstream offers excellent white bass fishing during the spring runs. Boaters must be careful in this area as both the main Licking River arm and the North Fork of Licking River arm hold tremendous numbers of submerged trees that pose a threat to a boat's bottom and the motor's lower unit.

The lower Green River from Lock and Dam #3 at Rochester downstream to its mouth at Henderson offers surprisingly good white bass fishing. The mouths of major tributaries such as the Pond River at Jewel City and the mouth of the Rough River at Livermore hold white bass from mid-March to mid-April. They also congregate below Lock and Dam No. 1 at Spottsville, below Lock and Dam No. 2 at Calhoun and below Lock and Dam No. 3 at Rochester.

White bass in the jumps during the spawning runs are as aggressive as any fish. Small silver or chrome shad-shaped topwater lures draw many strikes as do in-line spinners fished just under the surface. White bass are often present in these areas, but aren't necessarily in the jumps. Allowing a 3-inch white curly-tailed grub rigged on a 1/8th-ounce ball-head, silver casting spoon or a tail-spinner to sink a few feet before the retrieve will often entice strikes from white bass you may not know are there.

The license year expired Feb. 28. You'll need to buy a new fishing license, available in the sporting goods section of department stores and tackle shops to fish now. Licenses and permits may also be purchased online from the Kentucky Fish and Wildlife homepage at fw.ky.gov or by calling 877-598-2401.

That's how many Kentuckians, on average, read each copy of a newspaper.

You see, one reads it, then passes it on. Then another reads it and passes it on. And so forth.

So if you're trying to reach Kentuckians, advertise in the newspaper.

Pass it on.
